

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. A PLAY IN ONE ACT

SCENE

A Stage

THE curtain rises on a stage set for a Harlequinade, a merry black and white interior. Directly behind the footlights, and running parallel with them, is a long table, covered with a gay black and white cloth, on which is spread a banquet. At the opposite ends of this table, seated on delicate thin-legged chairs with high backs, are Pierrot and Columbine, dressed according to the tradition, excepting that Pierrot is in lilac, and Columbine in pink. They are dining.

COLUMBINE: Pierrot, a macaroon! I cannot live without a macaroon!

PIERROT: My only love,
You are so intense! . . . Is it Tuesday,
Columbine? —
I'll kiss you if it's Tuesday.

COLUMBINE: It is Wednesday,
If you must know. . . . Is this my artichoke,
Or yours?

PIERROT: Ah, Columbine,— as if it mattered!
Wednesday. . . . Will it be Tuesday, then,
to-morrow,
By any chance?

COLUMBINE: To-morrow will be — Pierrot,
That isn't funny!

PIERROT: I thought it rather nice.
Well, let us drink some wine and lose our heads
And love each other.

COLUMBINE: Pierrot, don't you love Me now?

PIERROT: La, what a woman!— how should I
know?
Pour me some wine: I'll tell you presently.

COLUMBINE: Pierrot, do you know, I think you drink too much.

PIERROT: Yes, I dare say I do. . . . Or else too little.
It's hard to tell. You see, I am always wanting

A little more than what I have,— or else
A little less. There's something wrong. My dear,
How many fingers have you?

COLUMBINE: La, indeed,
How should I know? — It always takes me one hand
To count the other with. It's too confusing.
Why?

PIERROT: Why? — I am a student, Columbine;
And search into all matters.

COLUMBINE: La, indeed? —
Count them yourself, then!

PIERROT: No. Or, rather, noy.
'Tis of no consequence. . . . I am become A painter, suddenly,— and you impress me —
Ah, yes! — six orange bull's-eyes, four green pin-wheels,
And one magenta jelly-roll,— the title
As follows: Woman Taking in Cheese from Fire-Escape.

COLUMBINE: Well, I like that! So that is all I've meant
To you!

PIERROT: Hush! All at once I am become A pianist. I will image you in sound. . . .
On a new scale . . . Without tonality. . . .
Vivace senza tempo senza tutto. . . .
Title: Uptown Express at Six o'clock.
Pour me a drink.

COLUMBINE: Pierrot, you work too hard.
You need a rest. Come on out into the garden,
And sing me something sad.

PIERROT: Don't stand so near me!
I am become a socialist. I love Humanity; but I hate people. Columbine,
Put on your mittens, child; your hands are cold.

COLUMBINE: My hands are not cold!

PIERROT: Oh, I am sure they are.
And you must have a shawl to wrap about you,
And sit by the fire.

COLUMBINE: Why, I'll do no such thing!
I'm hot as a spoon in a teacup!

PIERROT: Columbine,
| I'm a philanthropist. I know I am,
| Because I feel so restless. Do not scream,
| Or it will be the worse for you!

COLUMBINE: Pierrot,
My vinaigrette! I cannot live without My vinaigrette!

PIERROT: My only love, you are So fundamental! . . . How would you like to be An actress, Columbine? — I am become Your manager.

COLUMBINE: Why, Pierrot, I can't act.

PIERROT: Can't act! Can't act! La, listen to the woman!
What's that to do with the price of furs? —
You're blonde,
Are you not? — you have no education, have you? —
Can't act! You under-rate yourself, my dear!

COLUMBINE: Yes, I suppose I do.

PIERROT: As for the rest,
I'll teach you how to cry, and how to die,
And other little tricks; and the house will love
you.
You'll be a star by five o'clock . . . that is,
If you will let me pay for your apartment.

COLUMBINE: Let you? — well, that's a good one!

Ha! Ha! Ha!

But why?

PIERROT: But why? — well, as to that, my dear,
I cannot say. It's just a matter of form.

COLUMBINE: Pierrot, I'm getting tired of caviar
And peacocks' livers. Isn't there something else

That people eat? — some humble vegetable,
That grows in the ground?

PIERROT: Well, there are mushrooms.

COLUMBINE: Mushrooms!

That's so! I had forgotton . . . mushrooms . . . mushrooms. . .

I cannot live with. . . . How do you like this gown?

PIERROT: Not much. I'm tired of gowns that have the waist-line
About the waist, and the hem around the bottom,—

And women with their breasts in front of them! —

Zut and ehè! Where does one go from here!

COLUMBINE: Here's a persimmon, love. You always liked them.

PIERROT: I am become a critic; there is nothing I can enjoy. . . . However, set it aside; I'll eat it between meals.

COLUMBINE: Pierrot, do you know, Sometimes I think you're making fun of me.

PIERROT: My love, by yon black moon, you wrong us both.

COLUMBINE: There isn't a sign of a moon, Pierrot.

PIERROT: Of course not.
There never was. "Moon's" just a word to swear by.
"Mutton!"—now there's a thing you can lay the hands on,
And set the tooth in! Listen, Columbine:
I always lied about the moon and you.
Food is my only lust.

COLUMBINE: Well, eat it, then,
For Heaven's sake, and stop your silly noise!
I haven't heard the clock tick for an hour.

PIERROT: It's ticking all the same. If you were a fly,

You would be dead by now. And if I were a parrot,
I could be talking for a thousand years!

(Enter COTHURNUS.)

PIERROT: Hello, what's this, for God's sake? —
What's the matter?
Say, whadda you mean? — get off the stage,
my friend,
And pinch yourself,—you're walking in your sleep!

COTHURNUS: I never sleep.

PIERROT: Well, anyhow, clear out.
You don't belong on here. Wait for your own scene!
Whadda you think this is,— a dress-rehearsal?

COTHURNUS: Sir, I am tired of waiting. I will wait
No longer.

PIERROT: Well, but whadda you going to do?
The scene is set for me!

COTHURNUS: True, sir; yet I
Can play the scene.

PIERROT: Your scene is down for later!

COTHURNUS: That, too, is true, sir; but I play it now.

PIERROT: Oh, very well! — Anyway, I am tired
Of black and white. At least, I think I am.

(Exit COLUMBINE.)

Yes, I am sure I am. I know what I'll do! — I'll go and strum the moon, that's what I'll do. . . .

Unless, perhaps . . . you never can tell . . .

I may be,

You know, tired of the moon. Well, anyway, I'll go find Columbine. . . . And when I find her,

I will address her thus: "Eh? Pierrette!" —
There's something in that.

(Exit PIERROT.)

COTHURNUS: You, Thyrsis! Corydon!
Where are you?

THYRSIS: (Off stage.) Sir, we are in our dressing-room!

COTHURNUS: Come out and do the scene.

One wall is like another. And regarding
The matter of your insufficient mood,
The important thing is that you speak the lines,
And make the gestures. Wherefore I shall remain Throughout, and hold the prompt-book. Are you ready?

CORYDON-THYRSIS: (Sorrowfully.) Sir, we are always ready.

COTHURNUS: Play the play!

(CORYDON and THYRSIS move the table and chairs to one side out of the way, and seat themselves in a half-reclining position on the floor.)

THYRSIS: How gently in the silence, Corydon,
Our sheep go up the bank. They crop a grass
That's yellow where the sun is out, and black Where the clouds drag their shadows. Have you noticed
How steadily, yet with what a slanting eye
They graze?

CORYDON: As if they thought of other things.
What say you, Thyrsis, do they only question

Where next to pull? — Or do their far minds draw them

Thus vaguely north of west and south of east?

THYRSIS: One cannot say. . . . The black lamb wears its burdocks

As if they were a garland,— have you noticed?

Purple and white — and drinks the bitten grass

As if it were a wine.

CORYDON: I've noticed that.

What say you, Thyrsis, shall we make a song

About a lamb that thought himself a shepherd?

THYRSIS: Why, yes! — that is, why,—no. (I have forgotten my line.)

COTHURNUS: (Prompting.) "I know a game worth
two of that."

THYRSIS: Oh, yes. . . . I know a game worth
two of that!

Let's gather rocks, and build a wall between us;

And say that over there belongs to me,

And over here to you!

CORYDON: Why,— very well.

And say you may not come upon my side

Unless I say you may!

THYRSIS: Nor you on mine!
And if you should, 'twould be the worse for you!

(They weave a wall of colored crêpe paper ribbons from the centre front to the centre back of the stage, fastening the ends to COLUMBINE'S chair in front and to PIERROT'S chair in the back.)

CORYDON: Now there's a wall a man may see across,
But not attempt to scale.

THYRSIS: An excellent wall.

CORYDON: Come, let us separate, and sit alone
A little while, and lay a plot whereby
We may outdo each other. (They seat themselves on opposite sides of the wall.)

PIERROT: (Off stage.) Ehè, Pierrette!

COLUMBINE: (Off stage.) My name is Columbine!
Leave me alone!

THYRSIS: (Coming up to the wall.)
Corydon, after all, and in spite of the fact
I started it myself, I do not like this
So very much. What is the sense of saying

I do not want you on my side the wall?
It is a silly game. I'd much prefer Making the little song you spoke of making,
About the lamb, you know, that thought himself
A shepherd!— what do you say?

(Pause.)

CORYDON: (At wall.) (I have forgotten the line.)

COTHURNUS: (Prompting.) "How do I know this isn't a trick?"

CORYDON: Oh, yes. . . . How do I know this isn't a trick
To get upon my land?

THYRSIS: Oh, Corydon,
You know it's not a trick. I do not like The game, that's all. Come over here, or let me
Come over there.

CORYDON: It is a clever trick
To get upon my land. (Seats himself as before.)

THYRSIS: Oh, very well! (Seats himself as before.) (To himself.) I think I never knew a sillier game.

CORYDON: (Coming to wall.)

Oh, Thyrsis, just a minute! — all the water Is on your side the wall, and the sheep are thirsty.

I hadn't thought of that.

THYRSIS

Oh, hadn't you?

CORYDON:

Why, what do you mean?

THYRSIS:

What do I mean? — I mean

That I can play a game as well as you can.

And if the pool is on my side, it's on

My side, that's all.

CORYDON:

You mean you'd let the sheep

Go thirsty?

THYRSIS: Well, they're not my sheep. My sheep

Have water enough.

CORYDON: Your sheep! You are mad, to call them

Yours — mine — they are all one flock! Thyrsis, you can't mean

To keep the water from them, just because

They happened to be grazing over here

Instead of over there, when we set the wall up?

THYRSIS: Oh, can't I?—wait and see!—and if you try

To lead them over here, you'll wish you hadn't!

CORYDON: I wonder how it happens all the water
Is on your side. . . . I'll say you had an eye out

For lots of little things, my innocent friend,
When I said, "Let us make a song," and you said,

"I know a game worth two of that!"

COLUMBINE: (Off stage.) Pierrot,

D'you know, I think you must be getting old,
Or fat, or something,—stupid, anyway!—
Can't you put on some other kind of collar?

THYRSIS: You know as well as I do, Corydon,
I never thought anything of the kind.
Don't you?

CORYDON: I do not.

THYRSIS: Don't you?

CORYDON: Oh, I suppose so.

Thyrsis, let's drop this,—what do you say?—
it's only

A game, you know . . . we seem to be forgetting

It's only a game . . . a pretty serious game
It's getting to be, when one of us is willing To let the sheep go thirsty for the sake of it.

THYRSIS: I know it, Corydon.
(They reach out their arms to each other across the wall.)

COTHURNUS: (Prompting.) "But how do I
know —"

THYRSIS: Oh, yes. . . . But how do I know this isn't a trick
To water your sheep, and get the laugh on me?

CORYDON: You can't know, that's the difficult thing about it,
Of course,—you can't be sure. You have to take
My word for it. And I know just how you feel.
But one of us has to take a risk, or else,
Why, don't you see? — the game goes on forever! . . .

It's terrible, when you stop to think of it. . . .
Oh, Thyrsis, now for the first time I feel
This wall is actually a wall, a thing
Come up between us, shutting you away
From me. . . . I do not know you any more!

THYRSIS: No, don't say that! Oh, Corydon, I'm willing

To drop it all, if you will! Come on over
And water your sheep! It is an ugly game.
I hated it from the first. . . . How did it start?

CORYDON: I do not know . . . I do not know . . .
I think

I am afraid of you!— you are a stranger!
I never set eyes on you before! “Come over And water my sheep,” indeed!— They'll be more thirsty

Than they are now before I bring them over Into your land, and have you mixing them up With yours, and calling them yours, and trying to keep them!

(Enter COLUMBINE.)

COLUMBINE: (To COTHURNUS.) Glummy, I want my hat.

THYRSIS: Take it, and go.

COLUMBINE: Take it and go, indeed! Is it my hat,

Or isn't it? Is this my scene, or not?
Take it and go! Really, you know, you two
Are awfully funny!

(Exit COLUMBINE.)

THYRSIS: Corydon, my friend,
I'm going to leave you now, and whittle me
A pipe, or sing a song, or go to sleep.
When you have come to your senses, let me know.

(Goes back to where he has been sitting, lies down and sleeps.)

(CORYDON, in going back to where he has been sitting, stumbles over bowl of colored confetti and colored paper ribbons.)

CORYDON: Why, what is this?— Red stones — and purple stones —

And stones stuck full of gold! — The ground is full

Of gold and colored stones! . . . I'm glad the wall

Was up before I found them! — Otherwise,
I should have had to share them. As it is,
They all belong to me. . . . Unless — (He goes to wall and digs up and down the length of it, to see if there are jewels on the other side.) None here —

None here — none here — They all belong to me! (Sits.)

THYRSIS: (Awakening.) How curious! I thought the little black lamb

Came up and licked my hair; I saw the wool
About its neck as plain as anything!
It must have been a dream. The little black lamb

Is on the other side of the wall, I'm sure. (Goes to wall and looks over. CORYDON is seated on the ground, tossing the confetti up into the air and catching it.)

Hello, what's that you've got there, Corydon?

CORYDON: Jewels.

THYRSIS: Jewels? — And where did you ever get them?

CORYDON: Oh, over here.

THYRSIS: You mean to say you found them,
By digging around in the ground for them?

CORYDON: (Unpleasantly.) No, Thyrsis,
By digging down for water for my sheep.

THYRSIS: Corydon, come to the wall a minute, will
you?

I want to talk to you.

CORYDON: I haven't time.
I'm making me a necklace of red stones.

THYRSIS: I'll give you all the water that you want,
For one of those red stones,— if it's a good one.

CORYDON: Water? — what for? — what do I want of water?

THYRSIS: Why, for your sheep!

CORYDON: My sheep? — I'm not a shepherd!

THYRSIS: Your sheep are dying of thirst.

CORYDON: Man, haven't I told you
I can't be bothered with a few untidy
Brown sheep all full of burdocks? — I'm a merchant.

That's what I am! — And if I set my mind to it
I dare say I could be an emperor!

(To himself.) Wouldn't I be a fool to spend my time

Watching a flock of sheep go up a hill,
When I have these to play with? — when I have these

To think about? — I can't make up my mind
Whether to buy a city, and have a thousand

CORYDON: And a green one — and a couple
Of white ones, for a change.

THYRSIS: Maybe I have
Some jewels on my side.

CORYDON: And another green one —
Maybe, but I don't think so. You see, this rock Isn't so very wide. It stops before
It gets to the wall. It seems to go quite deep, However.

THYRSIS: (With hatred.) I see.

COLUMBINE: (Off stage.) Look, Pierrot, there's the moon!

PIERROT: (Off stage.) Nonsense!

THYRSIS: I see.

COLUMBINE: (Off stage.) Sing me an old song,
Pierrot,—
Something I can remember.

PIERROT: (Off stage.) Columbine.
Your mind is made of crumbs,—like an es-callop
Of oysters,—first a layer of crumbs, and then
An oyster taste, and then a layer of crumbs.

THYRSIS (Searching.) I find no jewels . . . but

I wonder what

The root of this black weed would do to a man
If he should taste it . . . I have seen a sheep die,

With half the stalk still drooling from its mouth.

'Twould be a speedy remedy, I should think,
For a festered pride and a feverish ambition.
It has a curious root. I think I'll hack it
In little pieces . . . First I'll get me a drink;
And then I'll hack that root in little pieces
As small as dust, and see what the color is Inside. (Goes to bowl on floor.)

The pool is very clear. I see A shepherd standing on the brink, with a red cloak

About him, and a black weed in his hand. . . .

'Tis I. (Kneels and drinks.)

CORYDON: (Coming to wall.) Hello, what are you doing, Thyrsis?

THYRSIS: Digging for gold.

CORYDON: I'll give you all the gold
You want, if you'll give me a bowl of water.
If you don't want too much, that is to say.

THYRSIS: Ho, so you've changed your mind? —
It's different,
Isn't it, when you want a drink yourself?

CORYDON: Of course it is.

THYRSIS: Well, let me see . . . a bowl
Of water,— come back in an hour, Corydon.
I'm busy now.

CORYDON: Oh, Thyrsis, give me a bowl
Of water! — and I'll fill the bowl with jewels,
And bring it back!

THYRSIS: Be off, I'm busy now.
(He catches sight of the weed, picks it up and looks at it, unseen by CORYDON.) Wait! — Pick me out the finest stones you have . . .
I'll bring you a drink of water presently.

CORYDON: (Goes back and sits down, with the jewels before him.)
A bowl of jewels is a lot of jewels.

THYRSIS: (Chopping up the weed.) I wonder if it has a bitter taste.

CORYDON: There's sure to be a stone or two among them

I have grown fond of, pouring them from one hand
Into the other.

THYRSIS: I hope it doesn't taste
Too bitter, just at first.

CORYDON: A bowl of jewels
Is far too many jewels to give away
And not get back again.

THYRSIS: I don't believe He'll notice. He's too thirsty. He'll gulp it down
And never notice.

CORYDON: There ought to be some way To get them back again. . . . I could give him a necklace,
And snatch it back, after I'd drunk the water,
I suppose. . . . Why, as for that, of course, a necklace. . . .

(He puts two or three of the colored tapes together and tries their strength by pulling them, after which he puts them around his neck and pulls them, gently, nodding to himself. He gets up and goes to the wall, with the colored tapes in his hands.)

(THYRSIS in the meantime has poured the powdered root—black confetti—into the pot which contained the flower and filled it up with wine from the punch-bowl on the floor. He comes to the wall at the same time, holding the bowl of poison.)

THYRSIS: Come, get your bowl of water, Corydon.

CORYDON: Ah, very good!— and for such a gift as that

I'll give you more than a bowl of unset stones.

I'll give you three long necklaces, my friend.

Come closer. Here they are. (Puts the ribbons about THYRSIS' neck.)

THYRSIS: (Putting bowl to CORYDON's mouth.)

I'll hold the bowl

Until you've drunk it all.

CORYDON: Then hold it steady.

For every drop you spill I'll have a stone back

Out of this chain.

THYRSIS: I shall not spill a drop.

(CORYDON drinks, meanwhile beginning to strangle THYRSIS.)

THYRSIS: Don't pull the string so tight.

CORYDON: You're spilling the water.

THYRSIS: You've had enough — you've had enough — stop pulling
 The string so tight!

CORYDON: Why, that's not tight at all . . .
 How's this?

THYRSIS: (Drops bowl.) You're strangling me!
 Oh, Corydon!

 It's only a game! — and you are strangling me!

CORYDON: It's only a game, is it? — Yet I believe You've poisoned me in earnest! (Writhes and pulls the strings tighter, winding them about THYRSIS' neck.)

THYRSIS: Corydon! (Dies.)

CORYDON: You've poisoned me in earnest. . . . I feel so cold. . . .

 So cold . . . this is a very silly game. . . .

 Why do we play it?— let's not play this game

 A minute more . . . let's make a little song

 About a lamb. . . . I'm coming over the wall,

 No matter what you say,—I want to be near
 you. . . .

(Groping his way, with arms wide before him, he strides through the frail papers of the wall

without knowing it, and continues seeking for the wall straight across the stage.)

Where is the wall? (Gropes his way back, and stands very near THYRSIS without seeing him; he speaks slowly.)

There isn't any wall, I think. (Takes a step forward, his foot touches THYRSIS' body, and he falls down beside him.)

Thyrsis, where is your cloak? — just give me A little bit of your cloak! . . . (Draws corner of THYRSIS' cloak over his shoulders, falls across THYRSIS' body, and dies.)

(COTHURNUS closes the prompt-book with a bang, arises matter-of-factly, comes down stage, and places the table over the two bodies, drawing down the cover so that they are hidden from any actors on the stage, but visible to the audience, pushing in their feet and hands with his boot. He then turns his back to the audience, and claps his hands twice.)

COTHURNUS: Strike the scene! (Exit COTHURNUS.)

(Enter PIERROT and COLUMBINE.)

PIERROT: Don't puff so, Columbine!

COLUMBINE: Lord, what a mess
This set is in! If there's one thing I hate Above everything else,—even more than getting my feet wet —
It's clutter! — He might at least have left the scene
The way he found it . . . don't you say so, Pierrot?
(She picks up punch bowl. They arrange chairs as before at ends of table.)

PIERROT: Well, I don't know. I think it rather diverting
The way it is. (Yawns, picks up confetti bowl.) Shall we begin?

COLUMBINE: (Screams.) My God!
What's that there under the table?

PIERROT: It is the bodies
Of the two shepherds from the other play.

COLUMBINE: (Slowly.) How curious to strangle him like that,
With colored paper ribbons.

PIERROT: Yes, and yet
I dare say he is just as dead. (Pauses. Calls.) Cothurnus!
Come drag these bodies out of here! We can't Sit down and eat with two dead bodies lying Under the table! . . . The audience wouldn't stand for it!

COTHURNUS: (Off stage.) What makes you think so? —
Pull down the tablecloth
On the other side, and hide them from the house,
And play the farce. The audience will forget.

PIERROT: That's so. Give me a hand there,
Columbine.

(PIERROT and COLUMBINE pull down the table cover in such a way that the two bodies are hidden from the house, then merrily set their bowls back on the table, draw up their chairs, and begin the play exactly as before.)

COLUMBINE: Pierrot, a macaroon,— I cannot live without a macaroon!

PIERROT: My only love,
You are so intense! . . . Is it Tuesday, Columbine? —
I'll kiss you if it's Tuesday. (Curtains begin to close slowly.)

COLUMBINE: It is Wednesday,
If you must know. . . . Is this my artichoke
Or yours?

PIERROT: Ah, Columbine, as if it mattered!
Wednesday. . . . Will it be Tuesday, then, tomorrow,
By any chance? . . .

[CURTAIN.]

AUTHOR'S NOTE

SO great is my vexation always, when reading a play, to find its progress constantly being halted and its structure loosened by elaborate explanatory parentheses, that I resolved when I should publish Aria da Capo to incorporate into its text only those explanations the omission of which might confuse the reader or lend a wrong interpretation to the lines. Since, however, Aria da Capo was written not only to be read but also to be acted, and being conscious that the exclusion of the usual directions, while clarifying the play to the reader, may make it bare of suggestions and somewhat baffling to the producer, I am adding here some remarks which have been found of value in preparing it for presentation on the stage.

Since the production of Aria da Capo by the Provincetown Players, I have received a great many letters from the directors of little theatres, asking for copies of it with a view to producing it. Very often, after I send the play, I receive a letter in reply asking for some suggestions for its presentation, and enclosing direct questions on points that have been difficult. It occurred to me finally that it would be reasonable to make up a sort of informal prompt-book to send about with the play; and it is that which is printed below. It will be found incomplete, and uneven, in some instances unnecessarily detailed, in others not sufficiently so; all of which is due to the fact that it was put together loosely, from answers to chance questions, rather than logically, as an entity in itself.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE PRODUCTION OF "ARIA DA CAPO"

SETTING:

The setting required is simple:— a grey curtain, a long black table, two slender black high-backed chairs, and a raised platform.

Instead of wings and back-drop the Provincetown Players cleverly utilized painted screens, the heights varying from 6 to 10 feet, these being set right and left of the stage in such manner as to give the effect of depth and distance.

The table, six feet long and two feet wide, has thin legs and is painted black.

When Pierrot and Columbine enter in the final scene, it is not necessary that the table which Cothurnus has replaced shall entirely conceal the bodies of Thyrsis and Corydon. Pierrot and Columbine must ignore them until the lines indicate their discovery, no matter how they may have fallen.

Particular attention must be given to the chairs in this set. They are used to construct the tissue-paper wall, and, although delicate, should be heavy enough to remain solid and steady, up and down stage, without the possibility of an upset when Corydon strides through the wall.

Near the footlights (actors' left) are two sofa pillows, used to represent the rocks against which the shepherds lean. On the left of the stage have another pillow, which Thyrsis places under his head when he lies down to sleep. Use cloth or crêpe paper for these pillows, and have them of spotted black and white material, or of any gay color except red or blue.

Cothurnus occupies a chair upon a platform, up-stage, centre, with two or three steps surrounding it on three sides. Drape this with plain heavy black cloth.

The table covering is important. Its width is equal to that of the added height and width of the table. As it must be moved to cover the bodies of Thyrsis and Corydon, it should be of sufficient weight to prevent slipping. It will be well to experiment with this, to ensure proper performance.

The cover should have black and white spots and striped ends.

The table is set as follows:— two large wooden bowls (at least seven inches high and fourteen inches in diameter). One is placed at each end of the table. That at Columbine's end should contain persimmons, pomegranates, grapes and other bright exotic fruits. Pierrot's bowl has confetti and colored paper ribbons, the latter showing plainly over the edge. (If Columbine uses practical macaroons, put them into this bowl.)

Near Columbine, place a practical uncooked artichoke; have this of good size, and nail it to a wooden standard, painted black. At both places there are tall white wooden goblets.

In the centre of the table there should be a curious, grotesque, but very gay flower, standing upright in a pot of wood or heavy paper, which will not break when Thyrsis drops it. Concealed at the root of this plant there should be a small sack of black confetti, to be used in the "poison scene."

The table should be set with nothing but these articles, and yet give the appearance of bounty and elegance.

Place the table parallel with the footlights,—the long side toward the audience.

her chair-top. Both chairs are festooned with tissue-paper ribbons, at least ten feet long, to be used later by the shepherds to represent their wall. These must be of such a texture as to break readily when Corydon walks through, and a pre-arranged transverse tear or two will assist in the prompt breakage when he does so.

PROPERTIES:

Two white wooden bowls, one filled with fruits and the other with confetti and paper ribbons,—one ribbon to be of cotton or silk, in order to be not too easily broken by Corydon when strangling Thyrsis.

Two tall white wooden goblets

One artichoke nailed to a standard

One flower in paper or wooden pot, the root wrapped with black crêpe paper (or use confetti)

Black and white table-cloth

Macaroons

Boots and prompt-book for Cothurnus (large flat black book)

Also, if desired, mask of Tragedy for Cothurnus Crêpe or tissue streamers of different colors, including no red or blue, for wall.

COSTUMES:

PIERROT: Lavender or lilac satin, preferably a blue-lavender. Care should be taken that the lavender does not turn pink under the stage lights. Pierrot's costume is the conventional smock with wide trousers, with black crêpe paper rosettes on the smock, wide white tarleton ruff. Black evening pumps with black rosettes may be worn. Black silk skull-cap.

COLUMBINE: Tight black satin bodice cut very low, with straps over the shoulders, quite like the modern evening gown; very full tarleton skirts of different shades of pink and cerise, reaching to the knees; ruffled bloomers of apple-green tarleton, the ruffles showing below the skirts; black silk stockings and black ballet slippers, laced with green. Hat of lavender crêpe paper, with streamers of gay colors — including, however, no clear red or blue. Hat should be small and very smart — not a shepherdess hat. Columbine should be made up to suggest a doll. As originally interpreted she had short light hair, standing out bushily all over her head. Long hair should be rolled under to give a bobbed effect, or could be arranged in obvious caricature of some extreme modern style, but must look attractive, and must be blonde.

COTHURNUS: Plain toga of dull purple in some heavy, unreflecting material which will fall into large folds, lined with sombre flame-color; a garment with large purple sleeves, of which only the sleeves were visible, was worn under the toga,—but the effect should be classical; heavy boots should be worn, as nearly as possible like the tragic Roman buckskin; one end of the great toga is tied into a rough hood which covers the actor's head; a mask may be worn, but it is often difficult to speak through, and, if desired, the actor's face may be made up to represent a mask of Tragedy.

THYRSIS and CORYDON: These costumes in striking contrast to the elegance of those of Pierrot and Columbine, should be very simple, and very roughly made; short tunics of outing-flannel or some such material — fastened loosely over one shoulder,—one shoulder, as well as most of the back and breast, exposed. Legs bare, or swathed from the knee to the angle in rough strips of the same material. Sandals. Cloaks of heavier, cheap material fastened to the tunics in such a way that they will appear to be simply flung over the shoulder, but actually fastened very cleverly in order to avoid tripping the shepherds, who are continually sitting down on the floor and getting up again.

Thyrsis wears a dark grey tunic and cloak of raw bright red,—but not a turkey-red, as this color will kill the blue of Corydon's cloak. Corydon wears tunic of light grey and cloak of brilliant blue. There must be no red or blue used anywhere in the entire play excepting in the blue and red of these two cloaks. The two shepherds must be so strong and vivid in every way that when Columbine comes in and says, "Is this my scene or not?" it will seem to the audience that it is she, not the shepherds, who is hopelessly out of the scene.

CHARACTERS:

PIERROT: Pierrot sees clearly into existing evils and is rendered gaily cynical by them; he is both too indolent and too indifferent to do anything about it. Yet in several lines of the play his actual unhappiness is seen,—for instance, "Moon's just a word to swear by," in which he expresses his conviction that all beauty and romance are fled from the world. At the end of the play the line, "Yes, and yet I dare say he is just as dead," must not be said flippantly or cynically, but slowly and with much philosophic concentration on the thought. From the moment when Columbine cries, "What's that there under the table?" until Pierrot calls, "Cothurnus, come drag these bodies out of here!" they both stand staring at the two bodies, without moving in any way, or even lifting their eyes. (This same holding of the play is used several times also by the shepherds,—for instance, always during the off-stage interpolations, they stand either staring at each other across the wall, or maintaining whatever other position they may have had when the off-stage voice begins speaking, until the interruption is over, when they resume their drama quite as if nobody had spoken.) Columbine's "How curious to strangle him like that" is spoken extremely slowly, in a voice of awe, curiosity, and horror. For a moment the two characters seem almost to feel and be subdued by the tragedy that has taken place. They remain standing very quietly while Cothurnus speaks his final lines off stage, and for a moment after he has said, "The audience will forget"; then very slowly raise their eyes and exchange glances, Pierrot nods his head curtly and says, "That's so"; they set their bowls gaily back on the table, and the play begins again.

Pierrot in such lines as "Ah, Columbine, as if it mattered!" speaks with mock saccharine tenderness; but in such lines as "If you were a fly you would be dead by now!" although he speaks very gaily his malice must be apparent almost even to her; Columbine bores him to death. When he says, "I'll go and strum the moon!" he is for the instant genuinely excited and interested; he is for this moment like a child, and is happy.

COLUMBINE: Pretty and charming, but stupid; she never knows what Pierrot is talking about, and is so accustomed to him that she no longer pretends to understand him; but she is very proud of him, and when he speaks she listens with trustful admiration. Her expression, "I cannot live without" this or that, is a phrase she uses in order to make herself more attractive, because she believes men prefer women to be useless and extravagant; if left to herself she would be a domestic and capable person.

COTHURNUS: This character should be played by a tall and imposing figure with a tremendous voice.

The voice of Cothurnus is one of the most important things in the acting play. He should have a voice deeper than the voice used by any of the other persons, should speak weightily and with great dignity, but almost without intonation, and quite without feeling, as if he had said the same words many times before. Only in his last speech may he be permitted a comment on the situation. This speech should be spoken quite as impressively as the others and fully as slowly.

CORYDON and THYRSIS: These two characters are young, very simple, and childlike; they are acted upon by the force that sits on the back of the stage behind them. More and more as their quarrel advances they begin to see that something is wrong, but they have no idea what to do about it, and they scarcely realize what is happening, the quarrel grows so from little things into big things. Corydon's first vision of the tragedy is in "It's terrible when you stop to think of it." Thyrsis' first vision comes when he looks into the pool; in seeing the familiar reflection he is struck by the unfamiliarity of one aspect of it, the poisonous root; for the first time he realizes that this man who is about to kill with poisoned water his most beloved friend, is none other than Thyrsis himself,—" 'Tis I!" The personalities of Thyrsis and Corydon are not essentially different. They develop somewhat differently, because of the differing circumstances.

When Columbine goes out for the first time she takes with her her artichoke and her wine-glass, also a couple of macaroons, which she nibbles, going out. This helps to get the table cleared. The other articles are removed by the shepherds when they prepare the stage for their scene, in this manner: at the cue "Sir, we are always ready . . . Play the play!", Corydon and Thyrsis come down stage, Corydon to Pierrot's end of the table, Thyrsis to Columbine's; simultaneously, first, they set back the chairs against the wall, Pierrot's left front, Columbine's right front; next they remove the two big bowls and set them in symmetrical positions on the floor, left front and right front, in such a way that the bowl of confetti may be the mine of jewels for Corydon, and the bowl of fruits, the punch-bowl, may represent the pool of water for Thyrsis; then, taking the table by the two ends, they set it back against the wall, right; next, while Corydon places the two pillows from the left wall on the floor to represent rocks in their pasture, Thyrsis removes from the table everything that is left on it except the table-cloth,—this should be only Pierrot's wine-goblet and the flower in its pot. (The flower is to represent later the poisonous weed which Thyrsis finds, the wine-goblet a drinking-cup beside the pool, the flower-pot a bowl in which to mix the poison and bring it to Corydon.) The two shepherds do this setting of their stage swiftly and silently, then seat themselves at once, in easy but beautiful postures, and remain for a moment looking off as if at their sheep while a complete silence settles over the stage and house, — a pastoral silence, if it is possible to suggest it — before they begin to speak.

When Columbine comes in, looking for her hat, she picks up the hat from her chair, now in the centre of the stage near the footlights, in a direct line with Pierrot's, which is centre back, just in front of Cothurnus,—the shepherds having set them in these positions, back to back, in order to have their aid in weaving the wall. After taking her hat, Columbine stands looking at the shepherds to see what is going on. They do not look at her. After a moment Thyrsis, slowly, with his eyes steadfastly on Corydon's, says, "Take it, and go." When Columbine comes in in the final scene, she is wearing the hat. She takes it off, however, as she sits down again at the table, so that the second beginning of the play may recall as vividly as possible to the audience the first beginning.
